We are in the situation of travelers in a train that has met with an accident in a tunnel, and this at a place where the light of the beginning can no longer be seen, and the light of the end is so very small a glimmer that the gaze must continually search for it and is always losing it again, and, furthermore, both the beginning and the end are not even certainties. Round about us, however, in the confusion of our senses, or in the supersensitiveness of our senses, we have nothing but monstrosities and a kaleidoscope play of things that is either delightful or exhausting according to the mood and injury of each individual.

On one of those bright, balmy Grey Green hills mornings, Miss Buccaneer 1972 decides to expose her beloved Victorian pages to a few golden rays.

EAST CAROLINA UNIVERSITY

Greenville, North Carolina

There are separate bathroom facilities for students and faculty — indicative of a lack of fraternization.

SERGEANT PEPPER SECTION:

10,000 students of which 1,500 are graduate students. Most graduates of North Carolina high schools are admitted. The average Freshman SATs are 1,000 and GPA is usually 2.0. 16% out-of-state.

ACADEMIC BULLSHIT:

Best departments are Education, History and Art. The Graduate School of History is fairly competent but bugged with political overtones. The Art department is excellent in the Commercial Design department. Dr. East of the Political Science department is very popular. Most of the good professors went out with a political purge in 1970.

Traditional academic shit. No Pass/fail, no student-originated courses and no Free U. Little independent study. No smoking in class. Many papers and tests and one black studies course taught by a white.

BREAD:

Annual tuition is $330 a semester in-state, $700 out-of-state. Loans and scholarships are tight and go primarily to in-state students. Work-study is available only to those in extreme financial need. Very few jobs. Dorms cost $1,000 for room and board. About 50% of the cats and 65% of the chicks live in the dorms. The rest live in apartments which rent for $140 a month or fraternities which are the same price as dorms.

Most have cars and costly threads are important to the few frat rats.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS:

Ratio cats: chicks — about 1:1.

Most students are southern straight — there are a few freaks “who dress radically, i.e. no bras, see-through blouses, extremely short skirts with no panties, long, long hair for shock value” (from a southern correspondent). Chicks like to think of themselves as sexual objects and balling is starting to be commonplace. Frats are dying.

Freaks hang at the “Mushroom” (head shop) and “The Id” (The Attic) (booze Hall). Straights hang at “Lum’s.” Dates include rapping and going to “The ID” or a flick. Grass is getting very popular — you can score anywhere in town — grass goes for $20 a lid. There have been a few half-hearted demonstrations.

SURVIVAL:

Could you survive in North Carolina?

The health service is poor and no BC pills are prescribed — no survival services. “No draft counseling services in the open.” ACLU and others helped set up underground facilities. However, these have been forced to operate off campus.

ENVIRONMENT:

Mental — People study and drink.

Physical — Greenville is a city of 26,000, about 100 miles from Raleigh, North Carolina. The campus is in a rural environment — there’s a mall with grass and trees — little else. The major eyesore is the heating plant which belches black smoke into the air.

There is nowhere to go. Drugs are the main escape for the freaks. Straights go home.

Dear Cathy,

Sorry that it has taken me so long to answer your letter, but this first week has been a pain-in-the-ass. It's hard to believe I'm finally in college. It's really nice, but I wish you were here.

There's really not too much to tell yet. My roommate is a pretty nice guy. He's from Statesville and knows Vickie Wright. In fact, he knows her real well.

My classes are at 8, 9, 12, 3, and 4. I'm taking Pol. Science 10, English 1, History 50, Sociology 110, and Library Science 1. That last one really sucks!

Please write soon and I'll write as soon as possible. Don't worry, I've only gotten drunk once. Hah, hah.

See you soon.

Love,
Ralph

P.S. Homecoming's in November. I'll start making plans.

Editor's note: The character of Ralph is fictional, all names, characters and events in this and following letters are drawn solely from the unintentional. — The letters are here to show what might occur one day.

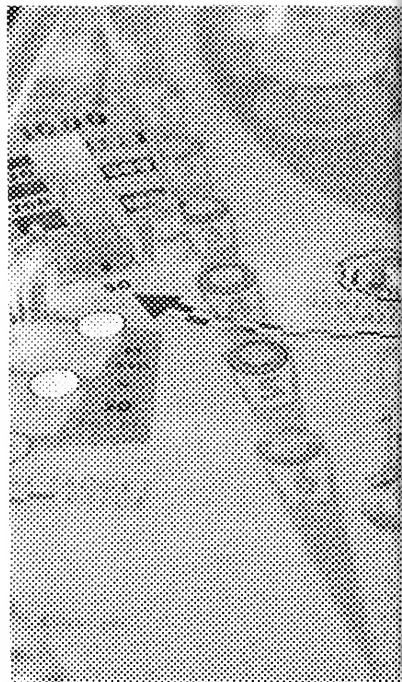

Man's insatiable appetite for challenge has been one of the major driving forces behind his existence. Both Caesar and Hitler challenged the world, and each received his just reward. Columbus and Armstrong ventured into the unknown and changed the course of history. But with the coming of Industrialization, Man found a convenient outlet for his desires in the machine. And nowhere is man's battle with the machine more intense than at the glass enclosed, titled playing board known as pinball.

Arising from the depths of the Great Depression, pinball appeared as a mechanical saviour, alleviating Americans' tensions while satisfying his need for challenge. And all for a penny.

Actually, pinball can be traced to the bagatelle board, whose roots reach back into antiquity. Bagatelle was a billiard type game. On a flat playing surface, players shot little balls into numbered holes with a bat or cue stick. Since it offered little action and required a lot of space, bagatelle remained an obscure parlor game appealing only to a select minority.

The introduction of Baffle Ball in 1930 changed the course of pinball history. Invented by a young enterprising businessman named David Gottlieb, Baffle Ball was the first mass-marketed coin-operated bagatelle board, with a tilted playing surface and plunger-shot balls. Made of brass and walnut, the game was a small tabloid box with numbered slots in the form of diamonds on the playing surface. The player could shot with a plunger a total of seven small steel balls. The game proved such an instant success that Gottlieb sold over 50,000 machines in one year. Each machine sold for about 18 dollars, but it paid for itself in a month, and the rest of the intake was clear profit.

The apparent success of the new game quickly led to competition. Raymond Maloney, a Chicago businessman, invented his own machine and called it Bally-Hoo. Both Maloney's firm, Bally

PINBALL

Manufacturing and Gottlieb's, D. Gottlieb and Co., are still the major producers of pinball machinery.

By 1932, every saloon, poolroom and sideroad filling station had its share of pinball machines as well as an abundant supply of players. The market became so saturated with machines that many observers felt the end was near.

The use of electronic circuitry in 1933, however, gave the industry a shot in the arm and added a whole new dimension to the game. The early electric machines were powered by four dry-celled batteries that flashed various colored lights and rang a bell.

Pinball innovation continued with the use of the first solenoid kicker device and the introduction of anti-tilt apparatus in 1935. In 1937, the now defunct Western Equipment and Supply Com-

HISTORY

Many invented a machine which rewarded the skillful player with free games. The new machine, Aksarben (Nebraska spelled backwards), also limited the number of balls to five and made it hard to win a game. World War I temporarily curtailed pinball innovation, but in 1947 a pinball designer named Harry Mabs connected a solenoid to a bat, added a button, and invented the flipper model marked in late 1947.

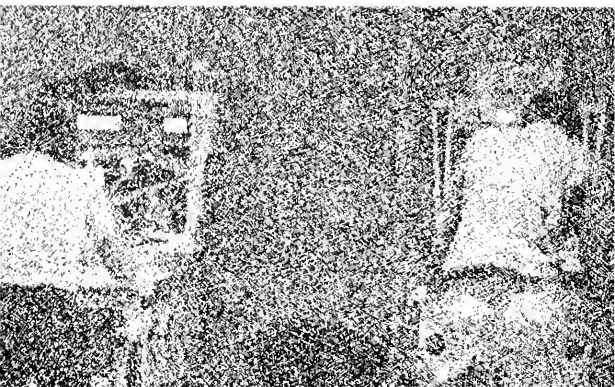

The uptake on this experimentalism was the addition of captive balls, messenger balls, multiple-player machines and collapsible targets. Extra balls and three balls added depth to the game, but in recent times, no major technological breakthroughs have been made in the game, only refinements of already existing technology.

Today, the game of pinball has come a long way since its beginning. No longer is it a game confined to the dingy corners of side-street pool halls and musty bars. Its clientele no longer consists only of wayward boys looking for a cheap thrill. Instead, embraced by the younger generation and immortalized by such pop songs as the Who's "Pinball Wizard", the game has reached a stage of social acceptability which it has never before enjoyed. Almost every respectable bar and eating establishment has one or two pinball machines in the corner, and recently many people have been buying the machines for their own homes, paying up to $900 for their new four-player model.

Like all small university towns, Greenville has its share of beer joints, parking meters, and X-rated movies. Life in Greenville is slow and quiet, and those who cannot withstand the rigors of Happy Hour or who get bored counting telephone poles can always take a retreat in the nearest bar and spend a few hours and dollars playing pinball.

In fact, the game seems to be the current vogue, with every other bar, restaurant, and gas station having two or three of the electric monsters hiding in the corners. At times, people stand in line, like gladiators awaiting combat, intensely studying the board and formulating their game plan. Pinball has so captivated this town that the ECU Student Union has some of the girls dormitories hold annual pinball contests.

To find out why pinball is so popular and what makes people play it, the "Buccaneer" sent out its wandering reporter to talk to some local pinball wizards and to get their views of the game.

. . . AND

BUCCANEER: You think there is any skill in the game, or is it just luck?

SCOTT: Oh yeah, there's skill involved. You have to know when to shake the machine and when not to. You have to be able to use the flippers efficiently. There's luck, too.

BUCCANEER: To be a good pinball player, do you think it takes a lot of practice and time?

SCOTT: Yeah, sometimes you could just step up to a machine and beat it, but to beat it consistently you have to keep at it. You have to learn the machine.

BUCCANEER: When you play pinball, is the main objective to beat the machine and get the replay?

SCOTT: Sure is. That's the only reason you put the money in.

BUCCANEER: What is it about pinball that makes you play it?

SCOTT: It's just a lot of fun.

WIZARDS

BUCCANEER: Ace, why do you like pinball?

ACE: It gives you something to do — to beat that fucking machine.

BUCCANEER: So, that's the main objective, to beat the machine?

ACE: Yeah, that and to have a good time. Beat the little ball around and get your frustrations out.

BUCCANEER: Do you think all machines are the same?

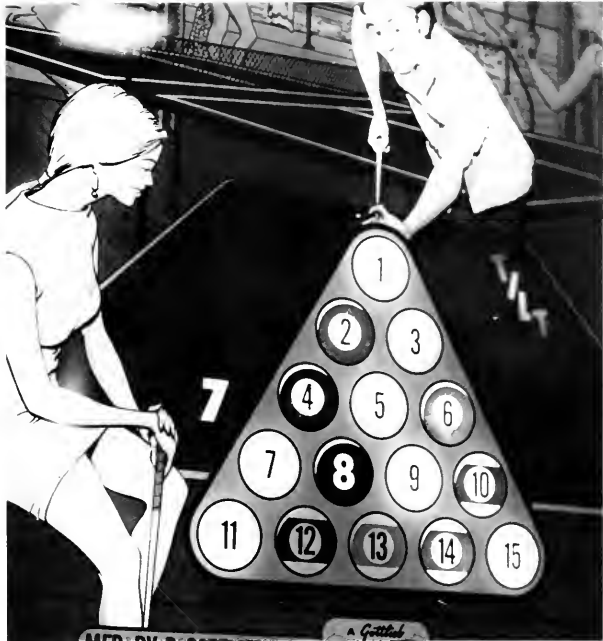

ACE: No, some of them are really bad. That's all they're making now — bad ones.

BUCCANEER: Which machines in Greenville do you consider the best?

ACE: There aren't any good ones in Greenville. I haven't run across any.

BUCCANEER: Do you get any kind of sexual thrill out of playing pinball?

ACE: Sexual thrill? Yeah, why not. I haven't really thought about it, but yeah.

an absurd drama in one act

Characters:

Rudolph Alexander — Associate Dean of Student Affairs known affectionately as "Rudy"

John P. East — Professor of Political Science

Louise Collins — a junior, native North Carolinian and sorority member

Dynamo Dave Cybul — Connecticut-bred, veteran of three years in the academic wars, etc.

Narrator — your friend and humble servant, played by himself

Narrator:

Well, friends, what is your personal definition of a university?

And does dear ol' ECU with unified walls fit this description?

Alexander:

In my opinion, a university is a center of learning free from political and other type restraints that you normally find associated with different governmental and non-governmental institutions of the day. It's a place where people, both young and old, can come and explore all aspects of knowledge, can seek answers to questions that they have and engage in educational endeavors in an atmosphere of freedom.

Well, I think ECU has made fantastic strides over the past few years. I think great emphasis has been placed on constantly improving our faculty, improving the climate for academic pursuits here. I think a spirit of freedom exists on this campus. We have the facilities for serious-minded people to engage in academic endeavors to meet the ends they seek.

Collins:

A university is the complete and ultimate formal education experience, very simply.

East Carolina does not fit this definition very well. It is limited in the opportunity to achieve academic excellence and the opportunity to have a different social experience.

East:

I consider a university to be a community of scholars and teachers who are joined in their common desire to learn and grow and develop. I look upon a university as being composed of students who likewise share this commitment to scholarship and learning.

I think that East Carolina does fit within this definition. I think it has come a long way, but I think we would all agree that it has a long way to go. We should never be satisfied with the status quo in this definition. It is nothing that you can really hope to obtain here or attain there in this short life that we have. But it is, I think, an ideal that we can work for and should work for — this commitment to scholarship and teaching.

I believe that East Carolina will continue to grow and develop in the future and will become a center of learning.

Dynamo:

This is, what is my definition of a university, right? Well, I'd have to say that a university should be, first and foremost, an institute of learning. By this, I mean not solely books but cultural exchange. There should be experimentation with life styles and different modes of grappling with the problems of "What is life?" or something like that. It should be a time when you can try things out, when you can learn different things.

It should be a time when you are allowed to think, a time when you are allowed to reflect and be stimulated by new ideals. I think stimuli is the most important thing.

I don't believe ECU measures up very well in these things. As far as culturally stimulating, they seem to be trying very hard to keep the out-of-state students out of here, eliminating many different outlooks. The emphasis at ECU is obviously not on books or learning. I don't know too many places it is, but it sure as hell isn't like that here. Most of the people run home on weekends, so there is almost nothing for the weekend student to do except for the Friday night movie and an occasional Sunday concert. People seem more relaxed and more willing to get involved with you, than say for a big city. But, for the most part, everybody in Greenville is into their own trip.

Narrator:

Now can you tell me what you like most about ECU with its blue sky and Greenville with its red of neck?

East:

I think the thing I like best about the entire community, including East Carolina as well as Greenville, is the whole attitude of people in eastern North Carolina. I'm originally a native of Illinois and I find that eastern North Carolinians are good people, solid people. They accept people who move in from outside in a very gracious way. They make you feel at home.

Eastern North Carolina, whatever faults it may have and it has them as any area does, has the great virtues you find in a more traditional rural area where people are friendly, families are close and there are the ties that bind. Things haven't been torn asunder. This is not often the case in large urban centers where life is very impersonal, very mobile and very quick-changing. All of this then, I think, makes for a healthy setting for a family, for a home, for a city and also, for a university.

Collins:

The students make the town, so there's a feeling of belonging — when the entire business district of the town caters to the college community, and there's bound to be a more intimate relation than in a city where the university stops at its own gates.

Dynamo:

I think the most pleasing thing about Greenville and East Carolina is the fact that it is so small and the town is so small. This is initially pleasing because you can come from another part of the state or even another part of the country and sooner or later, you wind up knowing a good many people and you don't feel threatened by downtown Greenville. It doesn't intimidate you, and the same thing with the university. It seems as though everything is on a small town basis with everybody knowing everybody else, and you can't feel intimidated and initially that is pleasing.

But, in the long run, it is monotonous. The town is boring. After a short period of time, you have been everywhere in the downtown there is to go, you've seen everything there is to see and, after while, you realize that you've seen everything there is to see and you realize that you've met just about everybody that you are going to meet.

After the first year that I was here, I just had a feeling that I had just about done it all as far as Greenville was concerned. I didn't know what else there was to do because everything just starts to get repetitive and monotonous. It's a nice place to come and get away from things, but after awhile, you realize that you have to get closer to things, not further away from them.

Alexander:

I think Greenville is a delightful place to live. I think East Carolina is an exciting place to work. The friendly spirit, in both city and university, contributes a great degree to this feeling. The university provides each person who works here with a sense of contributing to helping bright young men and women become better prepared to serve the nation, the state, themselves and to be just good citizens and contributing members of society.

I think, in my own case, that it is a lot of fun to be associated with this endeavor. The students are friendly and pleasant to work with. Each year, you see a new group come through with various committees and organizations and you feel the satisfaction from seeing a group of individuals develop into working teams and accomplishing whatever goals their organization has. So, the business of working at an educational institution is exciting. Being able to work with students and the cooperative spirit that is seen on every hand from the administration, faculty and students just makes ECU a really enjoyable place to be.

Narrator:

What changes have you focalized on in your stretch at EZU, friends?

Dynamo:

I've noticed a few changes, though not very big ones. Some of them have been right in line with changes that have been happening all over the country. Some of them are a bit behind time, ones that should have been made a long time ago. The students, as a whole, seem to be moving away from the hippie thing. People seem much more concerned with their own affairs and their own immediate circle of friends. The activism is gone, especially political activism. This is something President Nixon's reelection shows. It's all over the country, people are just tired and fed up. It is kind of a frustration. People just want to get out of here. They are not concerned with burning political issues anymore.

Maybe that is one reason why the Fountainhead has degenerated the way it has. If it is any reflection of the burning issues in the student's minds, then it shows really sterile minds or minds concerned with trifles.

Things are just changing slowly here. The university is not getting any more liberal, it is still way behind times. It will always be behind times, most likely. This school will never be in the forefront of any change.

I think people are slipping back into the mentality of the sixties. They had their little flirtation with intellectualism and involvement, and now it's over. The whole move now seems to be to just enjoy yourself.

East:

East Carolina has grown considerably since I have been here. I came here in 1964 and East Carolina was then an institution of about 6500 students. I think there has been some important changes in addition to this increase in size.

I believe that there is a greater permissiveness on campus in terms of dress and in terms of appearance. I think there has been too much permissiveness in the area of scholarly discipline and application. For example, there is, in many cases, nearly a total permissive attitude as far as the question of class attendance goes. This question of permissiveness is one of the most striking things that I have seen.

I am not saying that this is confined to this university. I think we're simply a part of a whole national culture that has moved in a direction of permissiveness which I think has gone beyond the proper bounds of freedom and moved into a world of license and slovenliness.

On the other hand, I do feel that we now have more good students at East Carolina. We have more students that are serious and conscientious in the pursuit of scholarly things.

Alexander:

In the past 10 to 11 years, there have been significant changes that have occurred at East Carolina. I think that probably 10 or 11 years ago, the real emphasis was physical growth. I don't mean to say that we were not interested in improving our academic standards, but there was great emphasis on buildings and enlarging the student body.

I think the emphasis has shifted in the past few years to improving the academic area, raising our standards constantly, providing facilities particularly increased library holdings for the benefit of the students in the academic area.

I think there has also been a shifting away from being concerned with some things many might not have felt were important, such as some of the rules. There is a lessening of emphasis on different types of rules for students with placing of more responsibility and increased freedom of the student body.

Collins:

There has certainly been a change in the attitudes of the students. We are less oriented toward the status quo.

The few physical changes are not worth observing.

Narrator:

Well, now what do you think, friends, that ol' EZU and Greenville will be like in 20 odd years?

East:

Well, I think by the 1990's that East

Carolina will be an institution, it would be my prediction, of somewhere in the vicinity of fifteen to twenty thousand students. I believe that it would have matured into what we commonly call a first-rate university, as we currently use those terms. I think with its increased size will come increased problems, but one of the great virtues will be increased excellence.

It will, by the 1990's have all the virtues as well as vices of a large state institution. I see its growth continuing, not only in size, but I think the real growth will be in terms of quality and in the terms of the expansion of various foundation programs that have already been established.

Alexander:

I would expect that in the next twenty or twenty-five years that East Carolina, along with the other major senior colleges and universities of this state, would become centers of research and graduate studies, at least not going below the junior level. I think our community colleges and technical institutes and some of the smaller senior colleges are going to probably wind up being the first stop along the educational trail for most of our students. And then, those of our students who are interested in pursuing their education toward a degree and a graduate degree will wind up at East Carolina or some of the other senior level institutions and graduate schools.

I would think that surely a thriving medical school would be in operation and possibly some other professional schools that we do not have now. Possibly the need at that time would warrant establishing an engineering or other types of schools for a citizenry that demands a more highly trained technical person.

Collins:

In twenty years, ECU should not really be much larger, but it will probably be more demanding scholastically with a larger graduate school population.

Dynamo:

If I came back to this university twenty years from now, I would expect to find East Carolina University and Greenville still relatively in the same place they are now, but there would be developments.

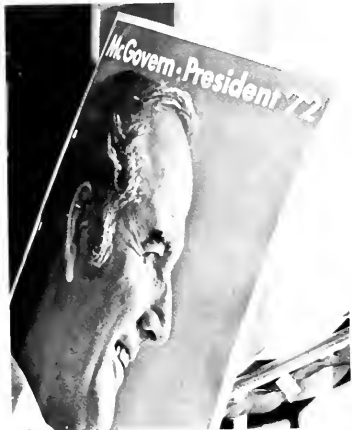

The university would have developed. I'm sure that it would be alot uglier than it is now. I think the kind of buildings going up now are a good indication of the functional, sterile, mechanical values that this university stands for. I think I would see no grass, no trees, no flowers. I would see lots of concrete, lots of brick. I wouldn't see any out-of-state students because at this time, the tuition for them would have become so high, it would prohibit out-of-staters from coming here. Or else, the N.C. Legislature would pass some sort of law to keep them out.

I think there would be a new gym and a new football stadium, no doubt. I would still expect that many of the other departments would still be condemned to the same delapidated buildings they are in now, if they're still standing. The population would have grown considerably in twenty years, but G'ville would still be the same town, an out of the way place with backward mentality. Hopefully, there will still be something in the people that attend the university which will make them look at Greenville, look at the university and do exactly what they are doing now, which is either go downtown and get drunk or throw something into their body or head to put them to sleep, at least for a little while.

Nov. 22, 1970

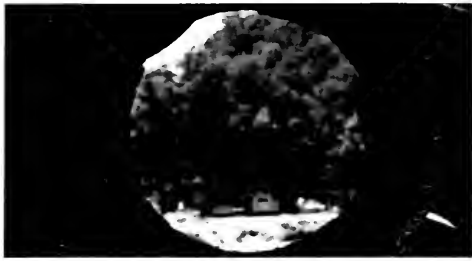

Dear Alan,

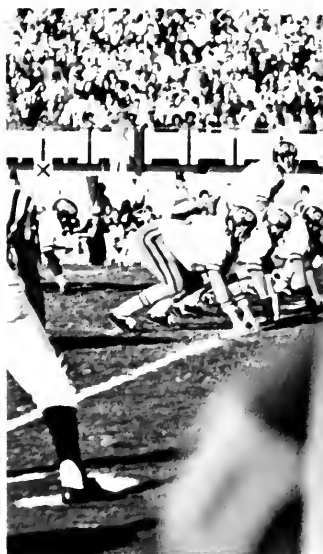

It's exam time again, god damnit. I've been studying my ass off because I haven't done anything all quarter. I'm probably going to flunk Spanish unless I bust ass on the final. I guess I'll eat a hit of speed and pull an all-nighter.

Guess what? I got stoned on pot last week. Some guy down the hall had some so I tried it. It's really kind of nice. At least, it doesn't make you sick. I guess you'll think I'm a hippie now. Who knows, maybe I will be. Hell, it's better than being a pants-under-your-arms frat rat.

Something's got to give somewhere, I guess. Anyway, let me hear from you. It's been a long time since we've gotten together. Take it easy and tell everyone their hello.

yours,

An elderly widower passes near the football stadium on his way to the grocer's. It is cold, very cold and wet. The wind has pushed the weather factor down to  $-15^{\circ}$ , and the old man has bundled himself as best he could with what little warm clothes he has.

He rounds the corner of the stadium and is startled by a crowd that has gathered to purchase tickets for today's game. He pauses for a moment but the wind hustles him on his way.

As he passes the group, he cannot see bodies or even faces; only breathing bundles stamping the ground like buffalo.

"They must be crazy," he thinks to himself. "What in the hell are they doing out in this weather?" He hurries on his way without thinking further about it.

By the time he starts back to his room the game has started. He hears the crowd roaring, but only faintly over the sound of the wind that has now picked up force and seems to be blowing through him.

As he nears the stadium the cheering sounds become clearer, and he again asks himself what it is that could possibly bring people out in this weather.

He thought, "I like the game OK, but I never thought much about going to see one. It's only men hitting each other."

He rounds the corner again where the wind is even stronger. He realizes the the only thing that is keeping him from freezing is the fact that he is moving.

"What are those folks in there doing to keep warm," he wonders. "Crazy people," he murmurs to himself.

Just as he passes an entrance to the stadium, an ambulance zooms by in front of him. He can see that inside there is a football player on the cot, and the attendants are hovered over him giving him oxygen.

"My God," he thinks, "What happened to him? What's going on in there? They must be killing each other!"

He moves by the stadium and on down the street, thinking as he goes. He's trying to figure out why 80,000 people would sit in the cold to watch football players try to kill each other.

An American Tradition

(A television studio, filled with middle-class America, laughing and whooping, awaiting their favorite show)

“AND NOW, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, IT’S TIME FOR TRUTH (BLAAAAH) OR CONSEQUENCES!

Farker:

AND HERE’S YOUR HOST, ROB FARKER.”

Thank you, everyone and good evening. You know, I met a scraggly hippie on the way to the studio tonite and he came up to me and said, “Hey man, how about some coin? I really need a hit of something.” So I said, “Okay,” and beat the hell out of him with my Spiro Agnew Self-Protecting Tiretool.

(Laughter)

And now to less serious matters. Let’s bring out our first contestants, and fine gentlemen they are. What is your name, sir?

Contestant:

My name is Dr. G. O. Lenkins.

Far

Not the G. O. Lenkins, chancellor of East Carolina University in Greenville, North Carolina.

Lenkins:

Yes sir, that’s me.

Farker:

Well, Dr. Lenkins, I believe we have someone backstage who would like to talk with you.

(A short, greying man walks from the wings, carrying a large, leather-bound volume.)

Man:

Dr. Lenkins, I am Ralph Edwards . . . and This Is Your Life.

(Wild applause from the audience. The curtains are drawn back, exposing a number of chairs gathered around a large circular table.

Edwards:

Edwards leads the startled Lenkins to the table and seats him.)

Yes, Lenkins, you have been selected for This Is Your Life, an American tradition. We have gathered your friends and relatives from around the globe to honor a great American and educator. Thousands who have passed through the portals of East Carolina University have you to thank for making that institution the fine school that it is. How many other schools can boast of winning the Southern Conference football championship eighteen years in a row? Yes, you have compiled a fine record, and tonight, this nation honors you.

(Applause)

Well, Dr. Lenkins, let’s get started down those golden lanes of memories. As you well remember, you were born in Chewfat, New Jersey on a cold, snowy November morning. And one of the people there to welcome you was someone you could never forget.

(A ghostly voice sounds over the studio speakers, that of an old and grizzled woman)

Voice:

I remember saying when I first held him, “God, this is the ugliest baby that I ever beheld.”

(Lenkins looks around with tears in his eyes)

Edwards: Yes, G. O., it is your favorite nurse and nanny, now 112 years old, Amelia Mushhead.
(The old lady wheels onto the stage and Lenkins rushes to embrace her)

Edwards: Now, Miss Mushhead, tell us about this man as you remember him as a child.

Mushhead: I remember bouncing pudgy, little G. O. on my knees and teaching him to play patty-cake. He was a delightful and happy child, and it makes me proud to know that the milk of my breasts went to make a great American.

Edwards: Thank you, young lady. And now if you'll just park next to G. O., we'll continue.
You grew older and attended Chewfat Elementary School, where you left your name permanently engraved — into the tops of 84 desks. Quite an achievement, and here's someone who I'm sure you will remember, even though you haven't seen her in 30 years.

Voice: G. O. was always a good student and I just knew that he would be a success someday, the good Lord willing.
(Lenkins smiles and awaits)

Edwards: Here she is, Dr. Lenkins, all the way from Chewfat where she still teaches school, your seventh-grade teacher, Miss Fanny Entwistle.
(A straight, proud woman, her hair pulled severely back, marches to the table and shakes Dr. Lenkins' hand.)
You taught this man when he was 13-years old. You have already told us that he was a good student, but did he ever give you any trouble?

Entwistle: Yes, sometimes little G. O. was a troublemaker. I remember one time when I had to heat his bottom with "Ol Betsey" — remember "Ol Betsey", G. O. — because he kept trying to sneak into the girls' bathroom. Always a curious person, he was.

Edwards: Thank you, Miss Entwistle.
Really a shock to see some of these people again, eh, Dr. Lenkins?

Lenkins: It certainly is Ralph. You just don't know.

Edwards: Now here's someone that you were always very close to, and I'm sure you'll be happy to see, your father, Herbert Lenkins.
(Father and son embrace, tears flowing freely on both sides)

Father: Yes, Mr. Edwards, I have fond memories of my son and the good times we spend together. He turned out well. He was a good boy and smart. But he was also kind of a smart alick. Always smart mouthing his mother — rest her soul.
I almost cured him one day when he was about 10. I'll never forget it. We were pitching ball in the back yard and I missed one of his wild pitches. He never could throw — he always tossed like a girl. Anyway, he called me an old fart. So I burnt him a fast one and knocked out three of his teeth.
(Laughter)

Edwards: That's the kind of fathers we need in this country today, if I might say so. He turned out fine though, did he not, Mr. Lenkins?

Father: Yes, I think he's turned into a fine man from what I hear.

Edwards: Now let's move on. You went through high school without any great ado, Dr. Lenkins, and then moved into the swing of college life.
Now a real surprise. Remember that first big fraternity dance at dear old Groove Phi Groove, and the young lady you escorted? Yes, G. O., here is that flashing old flame, Ruby Sweetlips.

("Big Ruby came out strutting, wearing nothing but a button and a bow")

Lenkins: Jesus Christ, I don't believe it. This is a real stab from the past.

Sweetlips: Yes, G. O. honey, you were a wild one. I'll never forget the night you took me to the dance and ended up fighting over me.

Edwards: He fought over you?

Sweetlips: Yes sir, we were out back in G. O.'s car going to it, if you know what I mean, when a couple of drunks started tapping on the window and yelling crude remarks. Well, G. O. got all bent out of shape and jumped out, swinging my brassiere like a wild man and . . .

Edwards: Eh, thank you, Miss Sweetlips. Why don't you have a seat over there?

And then, Dr. Lenkins, the old college days were over. You had your degree, but Uncle Sam called and you answered. You chose the Marine Corps, and here is a man that I'm sure you could never forget, your old DI, Major Rock Bolthead.

Bolthead: (The Major marched out as the band plays the Marine Corps hymn) Nice to be here Lenkins. Hell yes, Mr. Edwards, I remember the day that Lenkins came to boot camp. He was a pitiful sight with his head slick as a baby's ass.

And when I caught you Lenkins, crying in your bunk because you were homesick — what a laugh. But you turned into a pretty good Marine. Damn if you haven't gotten fat, though. I guess sitting on your ass in that chancellor's office takes a lot of time.

Edwards:

Thank you, Major. Well, Dr. Lenkins, our time is running short, but we have one more person that we want to bring out to pay homage to you. This is a man that you have worked with for many years, Clifton Bore, vice-chancellor of ECU.

(Bore, resplendant in a pink seersucker suit, strolls onto the stage, kneeling to kiss Dr. Lenkins left foot . . .)

Bore:

Yes, G. O. is a man of strength and decisiveness. I remember back around '68 and '69 when the hippies started invading our quiet, little campus. As soon as that long-haired filth gathered, trouble started as it always does.

They didn't want a new student union. They didn't want the smoke-stack converted into a bell tower. They didn't want to become a successful university and have a winning A-1 athletic program. But G. O. didn't take any guff off that scum, and he even turned the police loose on them a few times to show them he meant business. He coolly informed them if they didn't like his school, they could get the hell out of Dodge. It's been a true pleasure working with a man that doesn't mollycoddle the dirty drones that continually attack our society, but seem to enjoy living off it.

Edwards:

Thank you, Mr. Bore. And now, Dr. Lenkins, we have one final honor. The Alumni Association has been busy for several months and would like to present you with this certificate of gratitude from former students of ECU. Let's see, there are 23 names. Really touching, isn't it?

And now, let's dry those tears. Outside we have waiting two '56 De Sotas and a green Mustang to transport this happy party to Darwin Waters for a celebration. There we'll be joined by your lovely wife and family. And then we'll all pull up a tire and talk some more about old times. So, Dr. G. O. Lenkins, This Is Your Life — and Good Night, America, where ever you are.

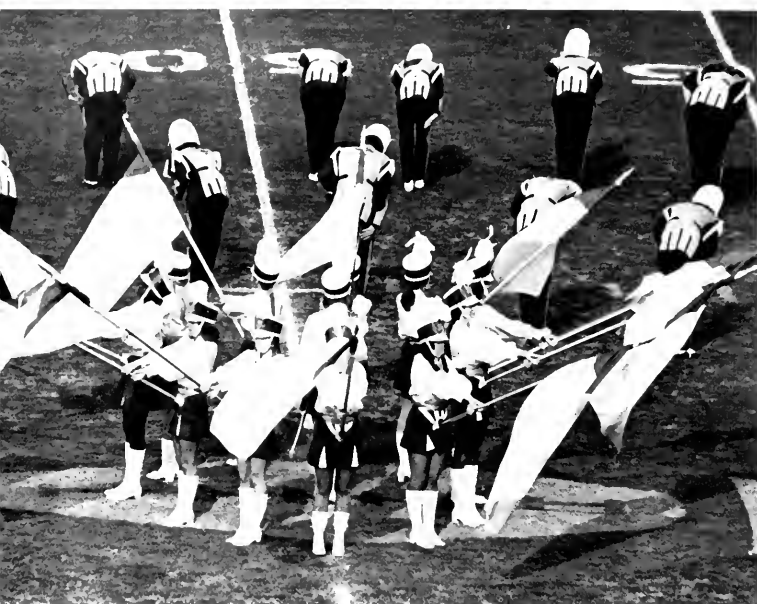

December 8, 1971

Dear Flash,

I'm really too blasted right now to be writing this, but what the hell. That's about all there is to do now - get stoned and go to class. It's really getting to be a drag.

It really seems like a long time since you dropped out. I still don't have a new roommate, which is fine with me. I'd probably get stuck with some asshole anyway.

The nars are getting pretty bad down here again. There's supposed to be a big bust in the dorm this weekend, so I guess I'll take it easy. Those bastards.

Well, Julie says hello and wants to know when you're coming down again. We've got some really nice MDA right now. I'll save you some.

Take care. Long live the Revolution.

Peace,
Ralph

A Chat With The Chanc

Thinking back over your years as president, then chancellor, would you term the job a rewarding one or simply a job?

It's been a very exciting experience because it has enabled me to be involved in all segments of our society. It has enabled me to shift gears quickly right in the middle of the day. I can go from the political world right to the business world into the religious and social worlds. I can see the development of young people, which is very interesting as far as I'm concerned.

I can see the freshman and watch him without his knowing he is being watched. I am able to see him grow and develop. Then, it is very rewarding, a few years later, to read in the paper about his promotion in the business or academic world.

It has also been interesting to be part of the development of this state as far as higher education is concerned. I have also been able to become involved on the national scene as I am a member of the National Commission of Accrediting which allows me to look into every profession. The law profession, the engineering world, the medical world are all associated with our commission. This allows me a viewpoint I've never had before.

I've also had the opportunity to do a great deal of travelling while in these positions. This year, for example, I have travelled more than 25,000 miles. I have been to Europe twice and have visited 15 of our states. This allows me to see what is happening, what is developing, what people are talking about, and what they are worrying about.

This leads us to some of the things that I've found we must do and that people want us to do. For example, I believe that we must become involved very deeply in the correctional sciences. People are worried about security. Our big cities are not safe at night. Who then should solve this problem? The people turn to the universities and say, "You are the sociologists, you are the psychologists. You are the people who have the time and facilities to study and experiment."

I've also recognized the fact that we are going to have to get into the business of second careers. More and more of our people are retiring from their first jobs when they are in their early fifties. Government and industry are only requiring 30 years of service now. And, also, the medical profession is succeeding in defeating the killers, the degenerative diseases. Cancer and heart disease will be conquered soon. We've already conquered typhoid, diphtheria, and many others.

Therefore, most of us are going to live to be 80 if we are not killed in accidents. We are going to have many years to devote to a second life. We are going to stop working at 50 or 55. Yet we will live to 80 or 85. What will we do and where will people turn for the answer? Again, to the universities.

So, in this position, I have a chance to direct some of this new programming. I have the chance to compare what we are doing with other institutions which I am able to visit. I have already visited 20 universities this year. All of this makes for a very exciting, fulfilling type of job.

I'm really a student, and probably will always be a student. It is, I think, a happy way to exist.

Have you ever thought that maybe this job and the other positions you have held at the university level were not really what you wished to be involved in, that there was something else you would rather be doing?

No, I don't think so. Some people say it is not the fun it used to be, but neither is living the fun it used to be. We are a dynamic people, and I believe one must adopt a philosophy of living.

This is a changing world, a different world and, in most cases, a better world. I think the mobility is fantastic. Young people are travelling more than ever before. They are, I think the expression is, "a breath of fresh air."

We are enjoying a shocking time, but it is enjoyable because it is new. I think we are a little more honest with each other. I don't care for it when some of my generation say, "Well, in my day, we never did this or that." But, you know darn well they did, and so did their grandfathers. It's probably more open now, and that makes the difference.

When the long hair came in, we were very shocked. Then, we began to look at history and saw Pasteur and Jesus and Moses and Robert E. Lee and General Grant and said, "What difference does it make?" It was the style and the preference of a person. Then when the hard hats began to sport long hair, it came into its own.

I believe the generation gap is closing, not getting wider. I think that folks are beginning to realize that there is a little bit of knowledge left in the older generation. The older generation is beginning to experience the younger generation at a new level, rather than being shocked. I've seen some old men at 18 and some gay blades at 80, so I've learned that all have something to offer, no matter their age. I am able to see this in my position.

I've realized that we should be experts in what we know how to do best here at ECU — that is, education. I've learned that people expect us to address ourselves to their problems. I didn't realize this quite so much until I became chancellor. I've had the opportunity to go to many different communities to speak and invariably, someone will say, "Well, we have this type of problem and I don't see why you people at the university don't do something about it."

We try to make this sort of thing into a two-way street of communication. I feel that I have the perfect right to go to their town and say, "Look, I saw this problem here, and you folks aren't doing anything about it. We've got the expertise over at the university to help you. How about if some of our people come in to help you?" They shouldn't be offended by this. Local pride should be swallowed, and common sense ought to be used. I guess this is all in saying that I've enjoyed this position and would not trade my experiences.

Is there anything which stands out in your mind or some special event which makes you feel that your career has been an especially rewarding one?

I have this feeling almost every commencement time because I know by being aware of the background of some our students that when you see this certain young man or woman out on the field, he is the first in his family's history to graduate from college. You can't help but say that this is not the end, hopefully. You can rest assured that this person's children will go to college.

A person is going to say, "Well, if Johnny can make it, Henry certainly can." You can see these families come out; and they are very, very proud. And this makes me very happy and proud also.

Another rewarding thing has to do with the fact that in North Carolina, historically, we would plow under much of our talent because of the low per-capita income. Many of our people were tenant-farming or working in low pay industry so that their children could not even dream of a college education. Often, the valedictorian and salutatorian from a high school would not be going on to college. I know this because I make many commencement speeches. I used to ask the principal what was going to happen to these top students. As late as ten years ago, the answer would be "nothing." Why? "Well," he would say, "their folks don't have much." This was another way of saying they were poor.

Now we recognize this problem on our level, and public schools have rec-

As this university has grown over the years you have served here, what major changes have you observed, both in the general atmosphere and the students?

Unfortunately, ECU has become much more impersonal. I remember the time when I knew almost every child of the faculty. Now, I daresay I don't know even a few. In general, I know very few of the people here anymore. We have become large, and we have become impersonal. This is one of the penalties you must pay when growing larger, though I wish we were back to the other way.

Another change comes in the area from which our student body is drawn. More and more people from the Piedmont area of the state have chosen to come here. Now, they didn't have to because there are 40 or 50 other places they could have gone. In spite of the adverse publicity we have received occasionally in the state's newspapers, the youngsters have chosen this institution and elected to stay here.

This, I believe, is a compliment to our faculty because students would not remain if they did not like what they saw in the classrooms. This is important.

Students seem to go in cycles. Right now our student body couldn't be nicer in terms of relationships. We can talk with them. There was period two years ago when the students, I think, were antiuniversity. Not only here because this seemed to be a national phenomenon. But I've now watched a great change take place.

I think this change started at Kent State when some of the radicals discovered that violence is not the answer. Negotiation is the answer, argument is the answer, dialogue is the answer. We now see this dialogue in our student paper, in our student government. Violence is not the answer. If you don't like the structure, then one must use the democratic means to change it. We are seeing this happen, and it is good for our university.

ognized it on theirs. They have guidance people now, and we don't seem to plow under talent anymore. The bright student, by some means or other, can get an education. I've often said that if you will show me a case, we will find some way to get this child an education. Now why is this important?

I honestly feel, and it may sound a little cornball, that the answer to cancer, to our racial problems may well come from the mind of some person who would have plowed under. It could very well happen, and I think has happened. Therefore, it is very rewarding to see the number of people who are on scholarships and loans in order that they may attend college.

This means we are saying that higher education is no longer the exclusive property of the affluent. It belongs to everyone in North Carolina, and this is a giant step forward as far as I'm concerned.

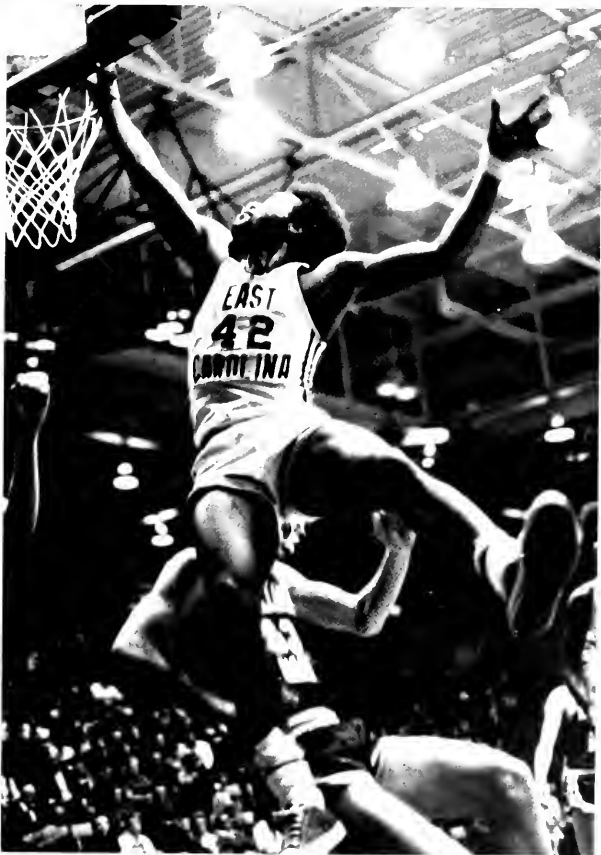

This is the type of thing which convinces me that this is a rewarding job which I have.

GOD DAMN

Religion, religion, who wants religion? Everybody's got it and everybody can get it. If you don't get it — ah well — go straight to Hell, do not pass Go, do not collect two hundred dollars. At least that's what Rev. Chester A. Phillips always tells me as the dawn breaks and Big WOOW keeps on trucking. Surely you remember "Coffee With The Pastor?"

Anyway, don't worry because The Way can still save you, whether you want to be saved or not. They used to grab me on the street and say, "Hey man, you wanna get high?" And I'd say, "Sure." Then they'd touch my arm and whisper, "Have you tried God?" And I'd sigh "God damn" under my breath.

Then there are the nights when Big Billy Graham fills the tube with his nappy head and preaches and rants of hell fire and damnation. Unless you are saved that very night: and, by the way, keep those nickles and dimes pouring in good people, because . . .

Then the choir, in all its silken glory, sings softly and tenderly as thousands make a public spectacle of their faith. I'd rather watch the lions versus the Christians than people cowering before a god. So I turn off my TV and think, "Holy Shit."

But that's religion, religion, who's got religion — the name of the game. If you don't have it, you can always get it — sometimes at a special beginning of eternity clearance sale.

Religion, religion; boy, I love it. I couldn't get along without my religion. Sometimes I feel really sorry for people who don't have any.

Some people try to put all religion down, and I know why. They're trying to convince themselves that they don't need any. They reinforce each other by laughing at religious statements, and this makes them feel safe.

I think there's a God. I pray to Him a lot, and this gives me security. Many people are like this. They think there's a God who listens to prayers and answers them, and this is alright. Even if there is no God, think of the security that religion gives people. There's enough false security going around these days, so it won't matter.

I've thought about it a lot. A God like this is the best answer I can find for some of the "whys" that exist, so I might as well believe in Him.

Now, I'll agree that religion today is too much of a business for some people to prescribe to. But the old-fashioned ideals are still there for those of us who can see through all the crap. We can still trust in the simple facts of faith and good living, and we can call this our religion.

Church is OK, but you don't really need it. It's a good idea, though, because it gives the sincere ones a chance to exchange ideas about their beliefs. But there are just too many fakers in church these days to suit me; too many "Easter Sunday Bests" who think that one hour a week in church gives them a free ride to Heaven and a license to put you down. Who needs that.

Naw, I have to have this religion of mine; I really don't think I could get along without it. As much as people put it down, I have to say that religion is good. Look what it did for Jesus.

Dear Mom and Dad,

Hope you are all well at home. I'm doing fine, I guess. School is about the same as usual.

I guess you'll be happy to hear that Julie and I have broken up. After the way you treated us at home that weekend, it's no wonder. She's really a nice person, despite what you think.

I also wish that you'd realize that I'm a 21-year-old college senior and not a little boy. I'm old enough to dress like I want and do anything I want to. I almost hate coming home now because of the continual hassle you give me.

But I hope you're all OK, and happy birthday Mom. I'm sorry I didn't get you a present. Write soon. Tell Cathy hello for me.

Love,

A Lady Behind The Legend

A Talk with
Dr. Rachel Kilpatrick

What has been your personal philosophy of teaching over the years?

I suppose it has been to arouse the students' interest in learning and scholarship. I would like to help them learn more about the world and relate academic subjects to everyday life.

I try to show them the parallelism between events that occurred in the Middle Ages, since I'm particularly interested in Chaucer and the fourteenth century. I also try to show them that the situations people met then were very similar to those we are meeting today. Customs were different, clothes were different, and language sounded different. But the basic problems are the same, and I think the students are always a bit surprised.

Do you think that this parallelism helps the student realize that modern man is still seeking solutions to the same centuries old problems?

Yes, we're still meeting the same problems and people have not changed. People are the same and their reactions to situations and other people are the same, regardless of the social and cultural situation. I think that is the value of an education. It is not the knowledge of specific detail; it's the overall approach to life. The more education one has, the more he should be able to face up to the situations.

Looking back over your sixteen years at this university, what changes seem most vivid?

Well, the college has changed from a rather small, provincial school to a larger university with a far wider outlook. It has changed for the better, I believe, except that we do miss the close contacts we used to have with the student body and faculty. Today, the departments are so large, the entire university is so large that we cannot begin to know people.

In the old days, we did know people on a personal basis. We were closer to everyone connected with the university. I think that is probably the greatest change from a personal point of view. However, academically, I think we've come a long way and our student body is certainly challenging.

Reflecting back, can you observe any change in the students' outlook toward the academic side of the university?

Attitudes have changed considerably, I believe, in general, students are much keener and this is refreshing. We have always had good students and still have. But now that we have raised our entrance requirements, we are gaining students whose interests are broader. In fact, they often spread themselves too thin. They are eager and a joy to teach. But one cannot be in a rut in teaching. These students require a new approach; they will not simply follow facts. The entire approach to teaching has changed.

Is this new student placing more emphasis on the academic area or is he viewing the university more as a total experience?

Well, most of them get off campus as fast as they can. They come on campus only during the day. They used to live in the dormitories, eat in the cafeteria, and stay on the campus. They did not live in housing in the suburbs. This has changed.

Now the students have wider interests. I think that it is the exceptional student who generally is completely limited to academic matters. It seems that students today are interested in outside activities, particularly social ones.

You have spoken before of the formality which seems to be leaving the classroom. I take it you are not in favor of this?

I still think that if a young person comes to college to learn, he should realize that his instructors do have information to give. I think that the instructor should be in charge of the class. I feel, however, that the students' opinions about the material in class are important. A good teacher needs to consider student opinions.

I do believe, however, that essentially the student is here to learn from the teacher and to learn facts. In English, students frequently feel that any field of English is completely subjective. A student feels that he likes a piece of literature instead of considering the literature objectively and finding out the reasons particular selections are great or not great.

He can still like it or not subjectively, but he can still recognize the greatness of it whether or not the composition appeals to the individual. I think students need to learn that literary evaluation is not all a matter of personal emotion. I think they should read pieces that do not appeal to them. I know that I teach many compositions, many so-called masterpieces, which do not appeal to me. However, I like them, I can teach them, and I hope understand them. But they are not the things that I read at home for entertainment, when I will read selections which appeal to me. But that doesn't mean that I don't appreciate the ones that I am not particularly fond of, because I do.

Are there any instances which stick in your mind that have helped make these past years of teaching worthwhile?

Yes, there was a young man who, as an undergraduate, did special work with me. He is now doing outstanding work at the Wake Forest Law School. I feel that working with such a student was worthwhile. Then, currently on campus, are two freshmen who have made a special point to come see me and tell me that their high school English teachers were former students of mine. They had asked these freshmen to carry their greetings to me when they came to East Carolina.

I'm certain you are aware that, over the university, you have gained the reputation as, let us say, a "rough" professor. Is this reputation justified?

That image is a good example of the way campus legends start. I think students do not say that I am unfair. They simply say that I have standards. They also say that they cannot bluff me because they know I will call their bluff. The good students don't mind. In fact, they come and ask for the courses I am teaching. The poor students, who are trying to get by without doing any work, shy off.

But that whole legend started, I think, when the college had the Junior English Test. Someone had to manage this test which was given every quarter to about 1200 students. A student had to take the Junior English Test to prove his ability to compose a paragraph which would be acceptable to an employer. The test was instituted because, at the time, we were having a great many people who had been away from school in the Armed Forces during World War II. These students were rusty in composition and needed help.

The papers were read by two readers, an English professor and a professor from another department, and were graded pass, fail, or between. The paper might be strong in content and weak in what we call "mechanics." It might be strong in mechanics, but lacking in content. When the student really wanted to improve, we had a special remedial English class that helped the student come up to a satisfactory standard set by the university.

Well, as I said, we were giving these tests every quarter to anywhere between 1000 and 1200 students; and someone had to be in charge. I was appointed to take over the operation. If a student wanted to see his paper and find out why it was not satisfactory, he came to me because I had the files. If he wanted to avoid the remedial course, he would come to me and, frequently, I would allow the student to write another paper. Perhaps he had had an "off day." However, often when a paper was graded "between," I did the third reading myself. I didn't read all of those tests, but somehow the legend grew that I read all those papers every quarter and was personally responsible for putting a student in remedial English. This rumor was not true; but it is the main reason the legend grew.

The fact that, for a number of years, I was in charge of this program is the origin of this legend. It's amazing how it has grown. But this is typical of college campuses. The myth grows and grows.

What do you see in your own future, now that you are retiring from ECU?

I am retiring to Florida where I can fish twelve months of the year. I am going to South Florida, on the Gulf Coast, where I can fish and boat. I may hopefully, travel a bit. I feel that I might just as well retire to a climate that I enjoy.

I hope that perhaps I can do some teaching as I don't want to get away from teaching entirely. I'm not going to an "over sixty" community but to a place where there are teenage centers and youth groups because I enjoy working with young people. I don't want to be cut off.

I'm taking my books with me; hopefully, I can do some of the reading and writing I have been wanting to do.

Would you recommend the teaching profession to someone interested?

Yes, I would! I have found my teaching career to be rewarding and very enjoyable. I would recommend it to anyone not interested in making large sums of money and willing to accept the duties and responsibilities.

Dr. Rachel Kilpatrick received her Bachelor of Arts degree from Brown University. She completed her masters study at Radcliffe College and received her doctorate from Brown. She is a specialist in Old and Middle English and is also an outstanding linguist.

Dr. Kilpatrick retired from the faculty of ECU in the spring of 1973 after 16 years of service.

FREE AT LAST?

The first modern blow for women's liberation came when Norma Helmer slammed the heavy door at the end of Henrik Ibsen's 1879 drama, A Doll's House. Here was a woman, having discovered that she had been living with a total stranger, freeing herself from the irons of marriage and motherhood.

To the Victorian audiences viewing this drama, there was no basis for a woman asserting her will and leaving her husband and family. As the last echoes of the slamming door hung in the air and the curtain slowly closed, the theatre reverberated with murmurs of disbelief and anger.

Ibsen had made a very unpopular statement. As he wrote in his notes for this play: "A woman cannot be herself in the society of the present day, which is an exclusively masculine society, with laws framed by men and with a judicial system that judges feminine conduct from a masculine point of view." And still this struggle goes on, nearly a hundred years later.

Ibsen felt that men and women should not merely attempt to live together. He felt that a man and a woman should, ideally, go through life as absolute equals. Each should be free to develop — in his own way — into a complete human entity.

As Nietzsche wrote: "What is freedom? To have the will to be responsible for one's self."

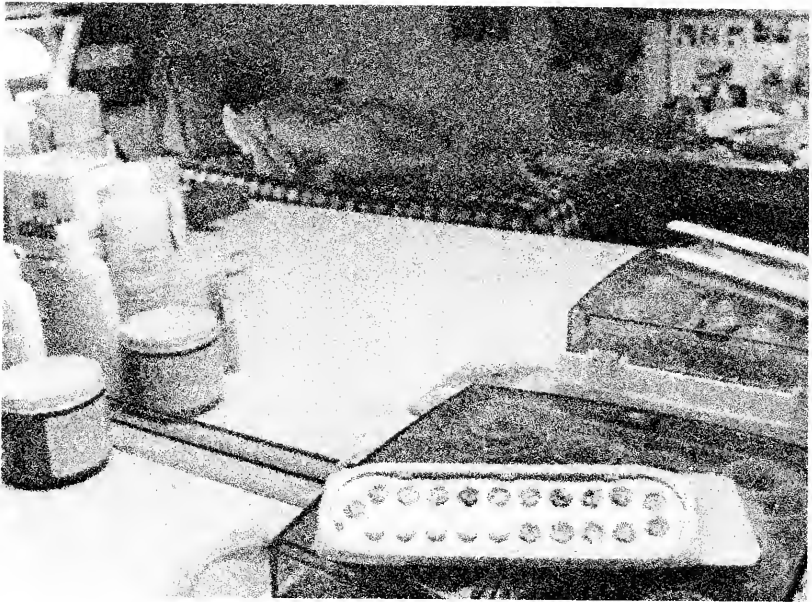

"Being liberated means, simply, that I am free."

"I know one thing — separate bathrooms is not what it's all about."

"Being liberated means I can go to bed with anyone I want to. Nobody has to play that game anymore."

"I'm convinced that being a woman is a wonderful thing and I'll never cease to be a woman. But I will not be oppressed by anyone or anything."

Dick was pulling Jane across the yard in her shiny little red wagon. It was a cool, sunny day with very blue skies. Spot chased a bird around the yard.

"Jane," said Dick, "let's go under the porch."

"Why," asked Jane. "It's very nice out here in the sun."

"But if we go under the porch, I'll show you my thing, if you show me yours," said Dick.

"Oh no," answered Jane, with a sly smile on her face. "My mother said that's not nice."

"Dick," said Jane, "I am a girl and you are a boy. But my mother says men and women are not really different."

"Not different?" asked Dick. "That's not what my big brother says."

"Yes," said Jane. "She says that a woman can do anything a man does. She says they can do any job a man can and shouldn't be put up on a paddle stool — whatever that is."

"I know what that is," chuckled clever Dick. "But I'm not telling."

"Anyway," Jane said, "My mother says women are free and are not just for making babies and kissing. They can take control if they want to."

"Really?" questioned Dick.

"Yes," said Jane, crawling under the porch. "So, if you'll show me yours, I'll show you mine."

"You first," Dick said.

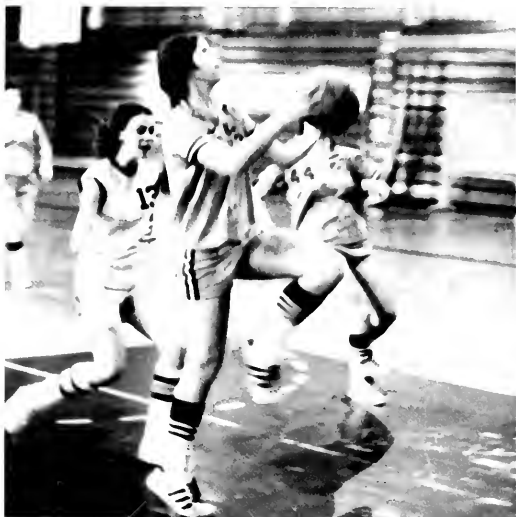

"Oh no," laughed Jane, "It doesn't work like that anymore."

And Speaking Of Women . . .

Whether motivated by the Women's Lib Movement or not, the Lady Pirates surely outdid all their jocked cohorts this year; making it all the way to the national playoffs before losing a game.

This defense-minded crew claimed the State and AIAW Region Two Championships in route to one of ECU's best athletic efforts ever. These ladies could not claim equality with their counterparts from Mingos, as they played a brand of ball that far surpassed any effort produced by the lackadaisical .500 Pirates.

Hitting nearly 60 points per game, the Lady Bucs were led by sophomore Sheilah Cotten and Freshman Susan James. Sheilah averaged 19 a game, and hit a season-high 31 against USC in the Regional Championship game. Susan was the second leading scorer, and was a tough defender and rebounder.

But it was more a team effort that led to the successful year; and such mainstays as Jean Mobley, Peggy Taylor, Becky Atwood, and Lorraine Rollins figured greatly in the 19-2 season, as did the entire team.

We offer our congratulations to Coach Bolton and the Lady Pirates for making another point for Women's Lib.

Scene: The office of the Athletic Director (AD) at the Old School, a 10,000-student southern university. The office is quite well-furnished, with a gold rug and a purple drapes. On the shelves are books boasting such titles as: The Single Wing: 100 Ways to Run It; Instant Replay; How to Coach; and How To Get Your Players to Call You Dad, by John Wooden. The AD, dressed in a gold coat and purple tie, is seated behind his empty desk smoking his pipe and gazing at his "Coach of the Year" award just to his right on the wall. His concentration is interrupted by a loud rap on the door.

AD: (reaching into his desk for papers, which he scatters over his desk) Just a minute!

Voice: It's only me, Business Manager (BM). You can relax. (enter a husky man with glasses, similarly attired)

AD: (chuckling) You startled me, BM. What's up?

BM: (propping himself on AD's desk) Oh, you know, the usual. Everybody wants money. Why don't they learn?

AD: (nodding) That again, huh? Who is it this time?

BM: Oh, everybody really.

AD: Uh huh. Well, we know how to handle them, so don't worry about it.
(another knock at the door)

AD: (shuffling papers) Come in. (enter a well-built, athletic-type male. He has shoulder-length hair and a beard, and is wearing a sweat suit) What can I do for you?

Male: Sir, my name is Curtis Crew, and I've been selected by my teammates to approach your office in request of a little money for a boat house. You see, we have nowhere to house our shells, and they suffer great damages from having to sit in the open. We may lose one because of weather damages.

AD: (glancing over at BM, who gives a little nod) I see. Well, son, we'd like to help you out, but you know we don't have any money for that sort of thing.

Curtis: Well sir, you see, we thought that since we had been requesting a boat house for four years, that ours might be at the top of the priority list by now.

AD: Nope I'm sorry. We operate over here under a strict budget, and there's no room for any new projects. Sorry.

Curtis: Well sir, thank you for your time; I know you're busy. All we ask is that you keep us in mind.

AD: Right-O. By the way, I hear you beat the Big School last Saturday. Is that right?

Curtis: Yes sir.

AD: Very good. Keep it up. It always looks good for the Old School to beat the Big School. Run along, now, and tell Crew Coach I said hello. (Curtis leaves)

BM: (arms folded now, he grins a little) Nice going, AD. I swear, if Crew Coach keeps sending those kids over here, I'm going to get mad. He's the one with the beard, isn't he? Is there any way he can be replaced?

AD: Not right now. I'm talking with a young man from Bob Jones University who is interested in Crew. We might be able to get him next year.

(pause)

AD: By the way, did you get off that order for the ball-girls' outfits? If you haven't done it yet, how about changing the order to two suits for each — a gold one and a purple one. How does that sound?

BM: Hey, that sounds terrific! Great idea! Those ball-girls are a knockout, huh?

AD: I'll say! Do you think we are paying them enough?

BM: I don't know. I'll ask them the next time I see them.

(another knock at the door)

AD: Come in. (enter a normal-looking young man with a glove on his right hand and a ball in his left) What can I do for you?

Normal: Yes sir. My name is Henry Handball, and I've come representing the old School Independent Handball team. We're unbeaten, you know; 15 straight.

AD: That's wonderful, but what do you need?

Henry: We need some money so we can go the National Handball Tournament and bring back the trophy for Old School. We figure it wouldn't take much; just a little for gas and food and maybe a place to stay for a few nights.

AD: Hmm. Handball, huh? No, I don't think so. We don't have any money for that sort of thing.

Henry: But sir, it wouldn't take that much. Don't you have some sort of emergency fund?

AD: Yes, but we have to use that for other things. No, I'm sorry, we just can't do it.

Henry: I guess we'll just have to get out and raise it ourselves. (he starts to leave)

AD: If you get enough to go, let me know how you do. If you win it, how about bringing by the trophy. Maybe we can get a picture made; you know, me presenting it to you and we can shake hands? . . .

Henry: Right! Hold your breath! (he exits in a rush)

BM: What will they think of next? Don't they know all our money goes for important things around here?

AD: Yeah . . . Oh, by the way, what do you think of switching the color scheme in my office? How would gold drapes and a purple rug look?

BM: Far out! My office could use a little touch-up too. I'll get maintenance on it first thing tomorrow.

(another knock)

AD: Yes? (enter a husky, muscular-looking fellow with huge arms. He is wearing a yellow wind-breaker with "Champs" written on it)

Fellow: (in a deep voice, he stammers a little) I'm Larry Linebacker. Coach sent me over; said you could maybe, you know, help me out.

AD: What's the problem, bud?

Larry: I'm failing History 50, and coach said that if I don't pass, I can't play.

AD: I see. What's your teacher's name?

Larry: I don't remember, but he's a strange man. He made me stand up in class the first day and made everybody clap for me when he found out I was a football player.

AD: Oh, him. Well, don't you worry about it. Do you have a paper to do in there?

Larry: Yep.

AD: Don't worry about that either. Come back in two weeks and you can pick it up.

Larry: Geez, thanks. So long, I gotta go practice.

BM: Nice kid.

AD: Yeah. Remind me to call up old Doc Odd tomorrow; see if I can't get him to give Larry a B . . . think he'll take a season ticket for it this time?

BM: Sure he will.

AD: And what was that kid's name from Chocowinity who writes papers for us? How about giving him a call tonight . . . say about $20?

BM: Sure thing.

(another knock at the door)

AD: Come in. (enter Wrestling Coach) Hello Wrestling Coach. How's it going?

WC: Pretty good, I guess. I was wonderng if you'd thought any more about my request for a couple of scholarships for wrestling?

AD: Yes, and I'm afraid I'll have to turn you down.

WC: But AD, I'm confident that with a few scholarships, we could win the national championships and put Old School on the map.

AD: (expression changes to firm) We don't need a championship in wrestling to be on the map. We were on the map with the single-wing; and now we've got basketball. Why, do you realize we played four big name teams this past season? What more do you want? (Wrestling Coach has already turned and is walking towards the door, shaking his head. He leaves)

BM: Who does he think he is? Is he kidding? Why, just last week I saw Old School mentioned twice in Sports Illustrated. Put us on the map!?

AD: Hey, BM, I'm tried of working today. Look, it's already 10 a.m. What say we take a ride over to Raleigh and get some lunch?

BM: Good idea, Ad. Whose car do you want to take?

AD: I tell you what; we'll take a State car. That way we can use our Old School Athletic Department credit cards. How does that sound?

BM: Swell. Let's go! First one to the car gets to drive! (they run out the door and exit. The sounds of the Old School fight song swell in the background as the curtain comes down hiding the whole mess) THE END.

Viet Nam: A Tribute To Existence

Dr. Richard Todd

History
Professor
Extraordinaire

I like to deliver lectures and cover the past, but I always try to make the past applicable to the present. I try to draw the students out and get them involved with this distinction. But I find that so many of the young folks say, "History — aaaah. That's past, that's dead. Forget it." But it isn't.

This is the roots and where we are now is the fruits. You don't have one without the other. It's all tied together and I take this approach to it. I also do not believe that history is repetitious. I try to get this across to my students by taking a period of history and showing them what it was that the leaders said, thought, and did; economic, social and political. Then we see that it is not really repetitious. Things may be very much alike, but never identical.

Then I get the students involved, get at them. I take the group and try to tear it apart. I want to get them to come out individually as much as possible. I want to try and make them know that they are individuals and, since nothing is repetitious, they aren't either. They should, therefore, learn what their talents are and how to utilize them. He should develop them and any institution of higher learning should make this possible. It should prepare them in their chosen areas and somewhat in all areas. I try to work this in all the time: the group and the individual, the past and present. By discussion and by lecture, giving and taking and tying it all in. And I make it relevant.

I find that a lot of young men and women just can't see the connection of history today, and what it has to do with tomorrow. Well, it has everything to do with it. To me, history is very much like a skyscraper. The penthouse — today — is not worth a tinker's hoot, cannot survive unless you have the foundation. It's just not stable without an understanding of from whence man came. And this is history.

Our founding fathers were very smart when they created our government and our way of life. They were brilliant enough to realize perfection lies beyond the reach of man. These were typical Renaissance men at this Constitutional convention. When they drew up their final form of government, it was an attempt by them to establish institutions that would make life more perfect, for man to use to make life more perfect. Not perfect. Perfection lies beyond the reach of man, but it is within his capacity to become more perfect.

How has blues shaped and influenced contemporary music?

Blues to me is like a mother tree, as many branches have come from it, like jazz and much of the so-called contemporary music. Take jazz. The average guy that you find now that is a good jazz musician can also play good blues. But the average guy that didn't start out from the roots, as we say, his tries at blues will sound a little bit mechanical, regardless of how well he can play or how well he knows his instrument. Anybody that knows anything about music can design or play a piano. Anybody can do it. It's just like turning on your radio or getting your dog to turn it on.

But, to actually put feeling into it, to actually feel it, that takes a little bit more. So, I think that the guys that came up in church, that had a chance to be associated with the many, many things that make a guy feel the blues are the ones who have the feeling for it.

When B. B. King talks about the blues, what does he mean?

A feeling, a feeling that has been living in me and many other people — my family, my father and his family and many others for many years. I talk about my life and the lives of other people who came up the same as I did. I talk about the world and its problems — that's the blues.

What kind of feeling does it give you to play before an audience?

I can't really define it for you. It's a great feeling to know that just one person really digs you. I can tell when a person is not just joshing you when he says, 'I really dug your performance.' They don't want anything except to let you know that they really like you and, well, I look at them and I think I understand. I know what they're saying and I want to say, 'Hey, that's enough, I believe you.'

Why didn't you come home for Easter? We waited and waited for you but I guess your family

To whom it may concern:

I am at long last, a college graduate. I sit here now clutching this ridiculous piece of paper and realizing how absurd and wretched my life has become.

I can see nothing in the hazy future and the past only hurts. I am sick of this world of hate and war and silly people. Therefore, I am resolved to do away with myself.

My love to all who have cared at all about me; my friends, my family; to the world, a wish for a new day.

Do not mourn me for I do not deserve it. Live your lives and try to be happy. My happiness shall be Death.

Student Union Breaks Out From Under SGA

Executive Board: (Standing) Kathy Myers, Wayne Powell, George Glosson, Wayne Sullivan, Bill Edwards, Bill Parsley, Norris Holloway

This was a year of change for the ECU Student Union, change in the entire setup and organization of the body. For the first time, all programming responsibility was transferred to the Union from the Student Government. Previously, the SGA had allocated a certain amount of money to the Union for contracting entertainment, but this year $3.50 of each student's activity fee every quarter went into a fund from which the Union drew resources for its various programs. This procedure automatically granted every student membership in the Union, whereas last year membership had to be applied for individually. The Union programs included low key entertainment such as films, a coffee house, concerts on the mall, and various types of recreation besides internationally known concert groups and speakers.

Gary Massie, President

Braxton Hall and Mark Browne review the agenda.

Student Union administrative structure was also altered. A Board of Directors selected the Union President and established Union policies. This Board consisted of six students, one faculty member, and one administrator. The President in turn selected the committee chairmen, who then appointed their own members. Each committee's job was to decide what programs to sponsor within its given budget. Gary Massie, this year's President, thought the new setup much more suited to student interests than the previous one for a number of reasons. A certain amount of money was guaranteed for programming, the Board was composed mainly of students, and not a great deal of bureaucracy was involved.

This current setup was followed on at least half of the nation's campuses. In switching over, East Carolina took another small step towards what is known as modernization.

Advisory Board. (Standing) Dr. Bland, Braxton Hall, Mark Browne, Shirley Blandino, Dr. Tucker
(Sitting) Gary Massie, Bill Bodenhamer, Dean Alexander.

ECU Artist Series Plans For Concerts

The Artist Series Committee brought great artists such as the Cleveland Orchestra, Frula, Beverly Wolff, and the First MOOG Quartet to the ECU campus. In March the committee also brought "Sleuth" a Broadway hit, to the university. These performances provided cultural entertainment for the university and the surrounding community at a minimum cost. The committee's main problem was motivating more students to attend performances. A budget of $34,000 allowed students to be admitted free but required the faculty and public to buy tickets.

Wayne Powell, Chairman

Coffee House Offers Folk And Blues

Coffee House Committee: Patricia Reutemann, Beth Olsen, Lewis Gidley, Debbie Godfrey, Bobbi Hayes (Not Pictured) Gil Gardner, Nancy Cogan, Bill Womble.

Lewis Gidley, Chairman

The cancellation of an act because a group came down with hepatitis caused a flurry of activity for the Coffee House Committee; a new act was rescheduled within twelve hours.

"The Canticle" provided folk and blues entertainment such as Alex Brevan and Raun McKinnon in a coffee house atmosphere. The committee oversaw the talent auditions, housing of the different acts, and the overall production of each act. A budget of $2400 was used in securing talent and new backdrops.

Problems arose because the group was committed to scheduling acts on predetermined dates rather than when the most desirable talent was available. This policy often prevented acts from appearing at all and made instant rescheduling a near impossibility.

Concerts On Mall Feature Bluegrass

Janis Andersen, Chairman

Free concerts specializing in talented but not yet widely acclaimed groups were sponsored by the Special Concerts Committee. "Mom's Apple Pie," "Mason Proffit," "White Witch," Earl Scroggs, and a summer bluegrass festival headlined the list of concerts. The problem of booking new groups before they became very well known and expensive was the committee's main challenge, but rain for concerts on the mall and groups arriving late were also problems. Committee members worked both during the regular year and during summer sessions to provide entertainment for the student body. The groups selected touched the areas of rock, bluegrass, and country to produce a wide variety for a diverse audience.

Special Concerts Committee: (Top) George Wood (Sitting) Donna Armstrong, Perri Morgan, Sonny Murphy, Denise Brewer (Standing) Wade Hobgood, Janis Andersen, Gilbert Kennedy.

Discussions are important in choosing groups.

Lecture Series Includes Crime, Outer Space

Members listen to Frederic Storaska after presenting an introduction to his lecture.

Dianna Morris, Chairman

Rape, drugs, and the space program were some of the topics of the '72-73 Lecture Series. Speakers included Frederic Storaska, Allen Cohen, Gordon Gray, and Betty Freidon. Travel Adventure films such as "The Sea People," "Lumberjack in Alaska," and "Exploring African Wonderlands" were also the responsibility of the Lecture Series Committee. Committee members booked the films and speakers with the help of a $12,500 budget and introduced speakers to the audiences. Like other committees booking performances, the group had problems finding speakers who were available at ECU's preset dates. Cancellations were also problems but were not frequent ones.

Films Committee: Gunter Strumpf, Gordon Barbour, Kathy Myers, William Stephenson, Cindy Smith.

Kathy Myers, Chairman

Bogart, Hitchcock Star In Festivals

Bogart and Hitchcock films festivals, pop films such as "Cat Ballou," "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolfe," and "Mash," and international films including "The Gold Rush," "M," and "Hunchback of Notre Dame" highlighted the works presented by the Films Committee.

Besides selecting the films shown, the committee held a student-faculty film contest and put together one or more film festivals per quarter. Choosing a wide range of films that suited the student body and also fit within the $8200 budget was the biggest part of the committee's work.

The films were free for ECU students who took advantage of them; but those students also took advantage of the committee by littering the floor during the flicks.

Spring Quarter Sees First Concert In Ficklen

Popular Entertainment Committee: (Standing) Nancy Taylor, Gary Carter, Diana Goetman, Russell Bradley (Sitting) Dean Alexander, Wayne Sullivan, Paul Brightman.

Problems such as no local airport to bring in top groups and a sound manager mistakenly going to Greenville, South Carolina, did not daunt the Popular Entertainment Committee. It brought in the J. Giles Band, Goose Creek Symphony, Loggins and Messina, and the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band. For a touch of nostalgia, Homecoming featured the Beach Boys and Stevie Wonder. An outside concert in Ficklen Stadium in the spring was a first for ECU. Most groups performed in Minges Coliseum.

Since the concerts were open to the public, the actual payment of groups was not subsidized by the student fees, but by ticket monies. This policy made it possible for nationally known groups to appear in Eastern North Carolina, whereas they would not otherwise.

Sten York, Summer, Fall Chairman.

Wayne Sullivan, Winter, Spring Chairman.

Spirit Committee: (Back) Mrs. Erwin, Mr. McClendon, Vickie Vaughn, Tamma Flarridy, Beverly Hester, (Front) Kathy Owens, Norris Holloway, Sidney Querry, Lou Ann Taylor.

Social Committee: Harriet Cannady, Veroncia Ward, Joyce Bouknight.

Groups Promote Cheers And Socials

Cheerleaders, bonfires, and pep rallies came under the jurisdiction of the Spirit Committee. Unfortunately, the odds were against them due to the lack of student spirit at athletic functions. Cheerleaders often cheered by themselves, and envied schools with tremendous response.

Despite the lack of support, the committee selected and trained cheerleaders. A $1,200 budget allowed the cheerleaders to travel to several games and paid for other spirit booster programs.

The Social Committee worked constantly to provide the student body with refreshments, parties, and open houses. Their $2,000 budget also provided for receptions, the Host and Hostess program, and the Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony.

Committees Provide Union Activities

Recreation Committee: Debbie Straw, Ed McFall, Wade Dudley, George Glosson, Rodney McCoy, Sherry Lewis.

Watermelon feasts with "all the watermelon you can eat," the Spring Awards Banquet, and all homecoming activities but the football game were the responsibilities of the Special Events Committee. The $3,300 budget fed over 4,000 watermelons hungry students during the summer and paid for the homecoming court's roses, the bike races, buffet breakfast, and judging of the dormitory, fraternity, and sorority decorations.

Informing ECU students, faculty, and the general public of Student Union activities was the Publicity Committee's job. The publication of the monthly calendar, "The Entertainer," and constant attention to the official outdoor bulletin boards were few of the activities.

The Recreation Committee sponsored the weekly bridge tournaments, besides the intercollegiate chess, table tennis, bowling and billiards tournaments. Awards were presented to the individual champs at the Spring Banquet.

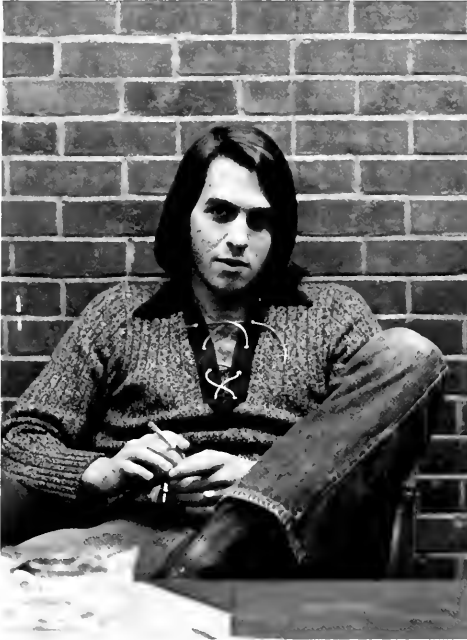

Publicity Committee: Mary Lentz, Bill Edwards, Jim Hicks, Janet Gardner.

Special Events Committee: Nancy Morgan, Debra Dodd, Art Weatherwax, Vicky Bailey, Debra Cowan, (Not Pictured) Connie Minges, Kathy McLeod, Cam Brown.

SGA Officers Create Decisive Atmosphere

Rick Atkinson, Vice-President

In past years, the Student Government Association has been little regarded by students, who were either unaware or uninterested (or both) in the goings-on of the Executive Branch. About the only time any sort of mass interest manifested itself was at election time, when a few hundred decided to get out and vote, usually for someone about whom they knew little or nothing.

Well, none of that changed this year. But the Executive Council of the SGA did work on some very interesting projects. For one, they compiled a thorough and very detailed housing list, giving information concerning the available houses and apartments in Greenville, which they received from landlords who responded to a detailed questionnaire mailed out by the SGA. Another noteworthy and commendable effort was the one to have all student activity fees reclassified as student funds from their present status as state funds. This effort stems from the numerous hassels that arose when the SGA tried to use the money for such purposes as the hiring of a student lawyer.

Rob Lusana, President

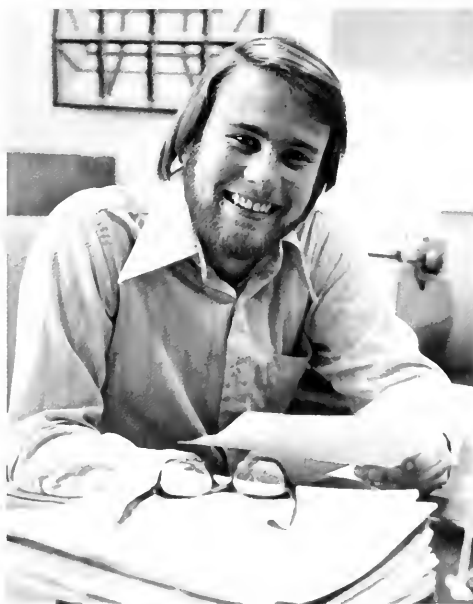

Dally Glosson, Secretary

The 1972-73 administration witnessed the inauguration of a 7-day-a-week visitation policy in the men's dorms, and the relaxation (finally) of female curfew hours. The Voter Registration project, which had been the pet program of President Rob Luisana, resulted in over 2,000 absentee ballots being notarized in the SGA. (Ironically enough, Luisana never did get his own absentee ballot to vote.) Luisana also served on the President's Advisory Committee on Athletics, which succeeded in appropriating much more money this year for minor sports.

On the state level, the Executive Council initiated the first organizational meeting of the Student Body Presidents of North Carolina, which was held here last summer. The group has been working on drawing up a student Bill of Rights, which, if passed, will mean a tremendous step forward for the emancipation of students.

Finally, the most incredible and astonishing accomplishment of all: this was the first time in three years that your SGA has not been in THE RED.

Mark Browne, Treasurer

Braxton Hall, Speaker of the Legislature.

Concentration is necessary for understanding the bills.

Abeysance was the key feature of the 1972-73 session of the Student Government Legislature.

The year was marked by a definite lack of conflict in the assembly, and by some of the shortest meetings in years. Last year the weekly sessions were known to drag on repeatedly until seven or eight o'clock in the evening, but this year saw 20 and 30-minute meetings nearly every week.

Last year also saw some hot and vehement debates over big and small issues, but few good debaters appeared in the legislature this year, at least not among the few who took the trouble to speak on something. Too often bills passed without much discussion at all, much less any debate.

The weekly meetings follow parliamentary procedure.

Legislature Revises Rules and Policies

Legislature members consult minutes of the last meeting.

Committee work is weight pulled by all.

The majority of what important legislation there was originated in the Executive Council of the SGA. One positive point about this year's legislature was more efficient leadership than in the 1971-72 session. Still, there were many members who seemed to know next to nothing about parliamentary procedure.

Some business of significance with which the legislature dealt included the question of expanding the transit system, revisions in the Publications Board by-laws, appropriation of funds for the Student Advocate, and the setting up of an abortion loan fund.

Elections Committee Urges ECU To Vote

Doris McRaye, Tommy Mathis, Suzanne Garner, Carol Reeves, Jeannie Coughenour, Kathy Holloman, Larry Jennings, Charlotte Swayzy.

Doris McRaye, Chairman

No drastic council reorganizations or resignations confronted the Elections Committee for mid-year turmoil. The ECU political year was rather peaceful. The Committee tried all election violations, manned the polls, and generally coordinated all SGA election activities. Counting ballots signified the climax of the elections and the committee's duties.

Members discuss publicizing the '72 elections.

Kathy Holloman, Chairman

Pub Board Upset Involves Chairman

Charges from the Fountainhead editor brought a turnover in the Publications Board membership and a trial of chairman Kathy Holloman for holding unofficial meetings and failing to notify all members of the meetings. Holloman was temporarily relieved of the chairmanship but was found not guilty.

The Board membership was found to be illegally chosen, and construction of a new one ensued. The upheaval in the Board brought a feeling of insecurity to the publications staffs as they worked at full force with their source of money in turmoil. The Publications Board distributed money from the SGA for budgets for the Buccaneer, Fountainhead, and Rebel, for which it was responsible.

Students Try Peers In Higher Courts

Honor Council: (Standing) Tommy Durham, Glenn MacFadden, Mick Godwin, Bill Fagundus (Sitting) Debbie Rowe, C. C. Cox, Doris McRaye, Ivory Anthony, Suzy Stocks.

Bill Fagundus, Honor Council Chairman

Personal violence, drunkenness, violation of visitation, and theft were the main cases for the ECU system of higher courts. The University Board was responsible for most of those, while the Honor Council took care of cases involved with Honor Code violations such as stealing. The trial of the Publications Board chairman was conducted by the Review Board fall quarter. The Review Board was the highest of the courts and tried appellate cases from the lower courts. The Publications Board case was referred to the Review Board by SGA Attorney General Tommy Durham who refers cases to all the boards and aids in selection of the judiciary members.

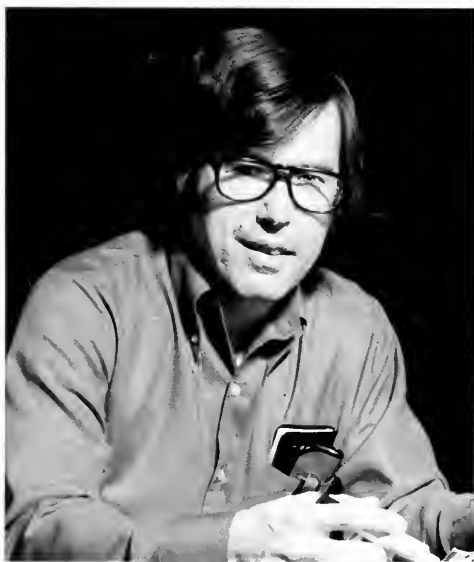

Jeannie Sumerlin, SGA Executive Secretary

SGA Employees Aid Organizations

While the SGA officers are the thinkers of the student government, Jeannie Sumerlin, the executive secretary, was the doer. Jeannie served as a filtering point for all SGA activities and information. She made appointments for the SGA officers, distributed activity cards, directed students confused about SGA functions, and did the usual assortment of office work.

Harried schedules were typical of days before deadlines as Joe Brannon, SGA photographer worked to complete picture assignments. He directed a group of student photographers on the Buccaneer staff but did the greatest portion of the work himself. Joe also provided pictures for the Fountainhead, Rebel, and many ECU organizations.

WRC, MRC Provide Dorm Activities

ay Evans, Treasurer; Stewart Pope, Recording Secretary; Bill Bodenhamer, President.

"Nantucket Sleighride" was the entertainment at the Christmas dance, one of the several socials jointly sponsored by the MRC and WRC.

Services of the Men's Residence Council covered all phases of university life. Study halls with tutoring services, night classes, and recreation facilities were available for members of the MRC. The MRC controlled all violations in the men's dormitories except those concerning marijuana. A $9,000 budget from resident fees and pinball machines financed recreation and equipment repair work. Campus police cars gained two blue lights from the MRC funds in the fall.

A later freshman curfew and self limiting hours for upper classmen gave the Women's Residence Council a footing for several innovations.

Students were allowed to paint their rooms under certain restrictions, and individual dormitories provided newsletters to inform residents of dormitory activities. Dormitory independence was stressed to provide programs that would meet the coeds needs, such as book buying references. The WRC also provided for two scholarships and a temporary loan fund for coeds needing assistance.

Mary Blue, Treasurer; Becky Fure, 1st Vice-Chairman; Shirley Blandino, Chairman; Donna Peterson, Secretary.

Meetings allow men to criticize, and discuss programs.

Buccaneer Creates New Image For '73

Breaking with accepted tradition, the Buccaneer staff worked to create a yearbook that would portray ECU in a form characteristic of campus changes. Rather than strive for a fourth straight All-American rating, the staff worked to give the Buccaneer a new face that would evoke student response. The two volume format was an innovation that worked to that end. Yet a $10,000 cut in budget caused a 120 page reduction in the book.

Deadlines, copy, and picture scheduling presented the usual headaches associated with a yearbook production, but another worry was added with the fall turmoil of the Publications Board. Staff salaries were withheld and the annual trip to the Collegiate Press Association in New York was nearly canceled. The cut in money required the resubmission of the budget after the editors rehashed plans.

Student Interest Lags In Newspaper

A couple of years ago, the Fountainhead was the focal point of interest on campus because of the controversy it was raising. At that time, the quality of the newspaper was at its peak, circulation reached a maximum, and students waited eagerly for the next issue to be put on the stands.

Since that time, the quality of the Fountainhead has gradually declined, with only occasional and temporary resurgences. Unfortunately, that path was not diverged from this year either. No invigorating issues were pursued, no exciting innovations were developed, and the paper was usually not very large in size.

Much of this was undoubtedly due to the difficulty encountered in digging up personnel, since few staffers had any journalistic background, and to the general lack of student interest in the paper and in campus issues.

Phil Williams, Fall and Winter Editor

Monday and Wednesday were Fountainhead printing nights.

The winter resignation of editor Philip Williams only added to further loosen the weakened structure. Still, as the only campus newspaper, and the main organ of information for the students, the Fountainhead served to keep the people abreast of the main goings-on in Greenville, and to provide for them an open outlet for their grievances.

A special pre-registration issue was of tremendous aid to students struggling through the tri-annual ordeal, and a facsimile Techo Echo issue with 40-year old stories offered a touch of originality. At this writing, the new editor had not yet been elected by the Publications Board. But therein may lie the hope for the new — or resurrected — life for the Fountainhead.

Morpheus: The mythological Greek god of dreams, of transformed states of human consciousness.

Transformation was a key word in this year's Rebel, for editor Philip Arrington felt that it should be a key part of the magazine. Art is a constantly changing medium, and the magazine should be continuously experimenting.

The magazine's function was not solely literary, nor was it political. It was in the interpretation of a reality that the secret of the magazine lies. A quote from Nietzsche in the fall Rebel put the idea well: ". . . it is precisely facts that do not exist, only interpretations . . ."

David Swink, Business Manager

Entertainment And Service Mark WECU

Training in broadcasting prepares students for the Big 57.

Pockets of progress can be found hidden away on the ECU campus, if you just look in the right places. One good place to start is the WECU radio station, where a new "progressive" format is the latest topic of innovation.

The excellent equipment setup which the station has acquired freed it this year to spend most of its time in program experimentation. The music was converted to easy listening, more varied album cuts, and the traditional speedy super-jock sound was replaced by a slower, more intelligent and more informative rap.

The switchover proved to be somewhat of a problem for the deejays, who were trained and experienced in the faster-paced monitoring. The training that students who are interested in broadcasting do receive is excellent, and WECU has pumped out many of the local TV and radio announcers. Numerous arguments have been voiced over the superiority of radio's potential to that of television, and perhaps the argument was won, at least semantically, by radio veteran Stan Freberg, when he said, "Sure, TV can expand your mind — up to 21 inches.

WECU staffers provide 24-hour-a-day service in news and entertainment.
